At the front of the book is a set of photographs and names of the miners who were trapped in the San José Mine followed by the prologue which tells us the mine can be found in the Atacama Desert in Chile and has gold, copper and iron buried in the mixture of its wealth. We follow the path to the mine through the eyes of one of its employees, Juan Carlos Agilar, who lives a thousand miles from the site and take in the beauty of the Chilean countryside passes by his bus window. We are also introduced to another few of the mine workers who attend the mine for seven day periods of twelve hour shifts. The mine operates twenty four hours a day. A brief history of the country follows as we are swept along on the miner's journey to the city of Copiapó, closest to the San José Mine, past the cemetery where many generations of miners lay and the poorest shanty town in the city.
