The young Vince Coltellone lay pinned under his grandfather's lifeless, blood-soaked body while watching the murder of his parents. For a decade, this was the event that defined who he was. His entire persona was altered on that day, and the graphic scene that he was forced to be a part of became branded to his psyche and was replayed every time that he closed his eyes. There was no escape from the reality of this. It didn't matter if he fought to convince himself that he had moved on, or tried to believe that he was no longer affected by it; nothing changed whether he allowed himself to fall into depression or attempted to rise above it. There was no way to fully deny that his identity was inevitably fused to this one, fateful day. Now, as Vince enters adulthood, he has a decision to make: Distance himself from everything and try to finally escape once and for all; or, seek revenge and become the person that he had promised himself that he would never be. No matter how hard he tries to convince himself otherwise, he knows that there is only one option if he truly wants to bring this dark chapter of his life to a close.
