In the 1960s 70s and 80s there was a breed of boat captains that were sport fishing guides for the very rich. Before the days of bank financing and fiberglass. Before any one lucky enough to cover the down payment on a yacht and could get a guide and enter a fishing tournament. There were gentlemen Anglers and their guides or captains. These men were truest that rigged their own baits from real fish and never put artificial bait over the transom. They put their time in for the giant tuna and blue marlin that swam the waters. There were several tournaments in the Bahamas that attracted a certain breed of men like these. Islands like Walkers Cay, Bimini, Cat Cay and Chub Cay had these tournaments and no more than 20 or so boats with large sums of money bet on the best crews to win. The yachts of choice were built by families like Rybovitch, Merritt, Whitaker, Davis and Andy Mortenson to mention a few. The crews of these yachts played as hard as they worked. In the evenings they drank in bars with names like the Complete Angler, The Brass Ring, The Lobster Trap, The Blue Marlin and The Buccaneer.

This is the story about one of these men, his rise to the top and his fall and then how his friends helped to rebuild him. He entered the sport late in the mid 1970s but still in the peak of the classic sport fishing. Raised among wealth, he had it all. None of this could help him after the loss of his best friend and secret he could not share. For many years he followed a path of self destruction. Until one day with the help of a new love and a new life surrounded by new friends he was forced to face his past. This is the story of Captain Derrick Stephens.
