Excerpt from Highland Cousins, Vol. 3 of 3: A Novel

To no one was the great news more welcome than to the councillor, who saw in it but another step towards the realisation of his own far-reaching schemes. And to celebrate the event, and perhaps - for certain dark reasons - to familiarise Jess with the spectacle of a pair of affianced lovers, he came bustling along on the following afternoon, and would have the schoolmaster and the two girls go away with him for a sail in Angus MacIsaac's boat, the Kelpie. There was a fine brisk breeze blowing; they would adventure out into the golden regions of the west; and the clear twilight would bring them home.
